You know that insulation doesn't help against -20°C without heating, right? Sufficiently heating up living space with electricity is just not viable here, must use gas, fossil or central (vapor) heating.

Imagine trailer park full of gas heaters lmao.

i hardly ever see them tho, it is surpising. i drive all the time, and have seen maybe 3-4 of those giant mobile home flat beds with the pick up trucks around them. i assume some are just shipped in smaller sections and assembled on the scene.

and there is nothing wrong with living in a mobile home. its some jewish scheme to make you ashamed to own some property and land. just rent goy, you dont want to be trailer trash do you?

most modern apartments are smaller and more expensive than trailers.

I guess I could buy a plot of land, put a trailer there and sell it once it's not needed? I don't think we have designated plots to rent for tailers.

Though I've heard some dudes trying with small ones, that could fit onto 1 car parking space.

Well those people would just get a ready-house that fits on a 8-wheeler. This market is very saturated here. And with gas, the issue is infrastructure: pipelines aren't very widespread so you have to take that into account, if you don't want to ride to a station with your own tank every other day.

You could, potentially, start a business of producing comfy trailers that fit on a parking spot of 1 car. Legally you're allowed to stay in these, but you can have no communications there so, shit in a bucket, shower in gym.

Yes, as long as you rent a parking spot (I guess 2 if you tow it around) - it's your right to stay there. Many such spots have optional electricity sockets with a meter so you can have some electric heating, like a blanket for example. It wouldn't be comfortable since the space would be tight, but it's survivable.

Maybe. Maybe it was the source of ignition explosion. Some suggest RV parked over service hatches that led to diesel tanks for generators. Exploding those would fuck up cables under street good, which was probably primary target. The building itself has "flammable" "hazardous" etc signs on it so it would not take a lot to cause a big boom. Those signs probably related to diesel tanks & maybe coolant inside the building.

There are service hatches across the street from the AT&T building, where RV was parked. Check out google maps. https://archive.4plebs.org/pol/thread/298713333/#298722182

It's impossible to park RV for days directly in front of AT&T building: a scheme was posted in one of threads about rules and it would just be towed away.

Next best thing is over diesel tanks across the street and if cables under the street were the target - there's no better way to do it.

You take a sturdy steel pot, smear TNT all over it, put some alluminium and magnesium for sparks, like it with copper sheet for pen and you have an oversized RPG-7 that can go through RV and hatch and ignite diesel fuel tanks.

Explosion seemingly coming from across the street is because that's where large AT&T cable hatches were blown upwards.

That's my take on it.

I don’t want to be an asshole but.. they do assemble trailers on site and call them modular homes. Also you pay rent for the land you park your trailer on so you don’t own it. The Jewish trick of homeownership you refer to is likely property tax, insurance and a mortgage. The only problem is that your property tax is in the form of rent being passed down from your landlord. You also don’t get a mortgage for the heap up of metal you live in because it’s worthless, you just buy it out right for 2-3x the cost of build. Now to your credit you can probably pass on the insurance bill because you can repair your shit heap in only a few trips to Home Depot.

I would think- this may be some type of coolant for the computer systems? If you figure out what they would be using a chemical for, then it's easier to identify from the MSDS

Or even better Warner had a weapon tried to kill himself before blowing literally or nearly nothing up, doesn’t like a pussified lib shoots behind his head in frustration or at the ground or air, proceeds to start RV and die near the scene watching his own firework but likely misrepresented his blast radius and pressure and got dismembered.

Doubt it is just petroleum or diesel. Maybe some kinda rare coolant.
Diesel and the like usually only go up to 1-2-0 i think and no bottom square, sometimes they only have red flammable or combustible signs around.
4-3-1-W is some weird shit, and I've worked in some strange places from bell labs to oil refineries. Not all over the plant, so I'm not around the entire process, but definitely near the generators. Never seen a sign like that.

Didn't witnesses say that there was a countdown? This would make sense and be plausible if it was just a generic warning sound, but witnesses have said that for 15 minutes every minute the voice counted down the time left before the bomb exploded. There's a big difference between a generic warning voice going off to a probable explosion, and a countdown to a controlled detonation

Warner fapping furiously about to coom at the sight of his own bomb and his own fireball separated the meat off his bones. Too close for comfort it's the only way or maybe he knew that he was gonna get caught absolutely and just stayed in the RV but why didn't no cop just check the RV properly? And couldn't you notice him as a bystander watching his own commotion?

I may have found it, found a nfpa search engine thing. prepare the link 5p4m:

Search engine:
https://cameochemicals.noaa.gov/search/advanced did 3-4-1 for blue red yellow in numerical Only result, but doesn't have the "use no water" part:
https://cameochemicals.noaa.gov/chemical/2830
Carbonyl Sulfide of note:
>FIRE: If tank, rail car or tank truck is involved in a fire, ISOLATE for 1600 meters (1 mile) in all directions; also, consider initial evacuation for 1600 meters (1 mile) in all directions. (ERG, 2016)
The explosion was definitely meant to be much bigger, or at the very least wasn't treated according to protocol.
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Carbonyl_sulfide NERVE GAS! I don't know. Was a chemical engineer in a previous life, but I forgot all that stuff.

Doesn't have the W signifier in the white square though so could be something even worse.

And out dead in that van, or maybe he shot himself in the van not in the head but on the body and slowly died in the RV and proceeded to spread like melted margarine or nutted hard all over the scene.

>security cameras all over his house >fbi so eager to get this under wraps, and to pin it exclusively on Warner who they also insist in dead

He was a glow nigger, likely worked in a group with him being a "tech guy" to get something from the AT&T [who is known to work with the nsa] building and ran into some security or glow niggers or something and ended up shooting some refrigerated system that then tripped a monitoring system that issued the "if you can hear this, evacuate now" message before the system exploded or was detonated and shot out of the AT&T building and completely destroyed the other side of the Street.

I also haven't see any sign of the rv in any of the footage or images of the site. There's something that seems like the rv in the footage of the explosion, but that easily just be the two cars at the end of the street. This nigga could. Have easily gotten in, gotten whatever he needed, and then either accidentally or purposefully destroyed any evidence left behind.
And I really don't believe the fbi as they are, as I already said, trying to wrap this up so quickly, and Nashville is still a no fly zone with clearance to shoot down "suspicious" aircraft.

You can’t hear a .32 revolver with an 8 inch barrel at 40 feet next to a running car. At all. Bullet too small, super special, bereta colt magnum glock 300 yards aks anything above that half mile whole mile with echo or proper bounce. It’s the crack of the bullet that reacts totally different on the body and it’s shock than the firecracker it makes people think bullet. Not firecracker instantly. If there’s two bullets the sound is mechanic, most people know what tied firecrackers sound like.

And explosion large enough to completely destroy the chassis and cab of a class c would have left a crater several feet deep and wouldn't have left burnt out carcasses of cars in the proximity that the cars in the area were at.
I'm starting to doubt that the rv or Quinn were even there when it exploded.

>It's impossible to park RV for days directly in front of AT&T building: a scheme was posted in one of threads about rules and it would just be towed away.

Assuming anyone gave a fuck. Towing in many cities is contracted and response times vary greatly unless a vehicle is blocking traffic. Never confuse paper rules with real practice. It was just another vehicle on a boring street in a boring city until it exploded.

Name the gas and it's typical applications and why AT&T would use a dangerous coolant when benign coolants abound and safe liquid cooling is a very solved problem.

Obvious troll. Anyone can buy a lot and have their manufactured housing delivered. They are not confined to trailer part rented lots. Your post is stupid by /b standards which is quite the accomplishment.
Private parties are free to buy and sell them too and moving them is easy as calling a transport service who come out, separate the halves if doublewide, throw slip axles beneath and attach, then connect to a truck (referred to as mobile home toters) and tow to new site.
It's like moving a cuckshed but larger.

I don't know about this building specifically, but I work at some places like server farms or investment banks (hedge funds) that have crazy coolant set ups and expect to not have a millisecond of downtime annually. A telephone server location, which is what I'm guessing this is, or maybe even some type of lab here to test tech, may have some chemicals that most people have never even heard about before.
Coincidentally, those are usually the places that we will "shut down" on days like christmas, thanksgiving, july 4th, other holidays, and the weekends.

...and when I say "shutdown" I mean we will shutdown as much of their electrical feeders and substation as possible at a time in order to keep their process running, test their gens, that kinda stuff, electrical maintenance testing. we often go in the same time any other annual/biannual maintenance has to be done because it's easier at that time as long as we coordinate appropriately.

I don't have as much knowledge about the entire situation as most people here do, just kind of jumping in and out of the thread the past few hours. But that picture posted to another forum does seem plausible. Or whoever planted the RV, if it had the bomb on it, put it there because they knew that those chemicals were underground or pretty close to that side of the building (maybe in a tank) in hopes that it exacerbated the explosion that much more.

That would actually make a ton of sense. If you knew where these pipelines were, you could a lot more damage. The amount of premeditation of this bombing would put our own government to shame.

Did it occur to anyone that taking out this AT&T facility also took a lot of businesses offline? A lot of businesses don't use comcast, but AT&T and Sprint connections. I just checked my work email and apparently the explosion took out primary connectivity of 5 of our offices and we had to switch to backup
